“Are you sure this is a good idea?” Nancy whispered as they hid in the back of the clothing rack. “Yes, now shhh” Robin held her breath, hearing the chatter across the store. The two of them- or well, Robin wanted to hide overnight in a store at the mall.

“Kay’ I’m locking up now, you coming?” A girl’s voice chirped as the sound of a key jangling filled the empty air, “Yup, let me grab my bag... there we go, okay let’s head out.” A deeper female voice said. The last thing Nancy and Robin heard was a large gate being brought down, closing over the shop. The loud bang made Nancy jump, her hand instinctively going to Robins. Robin snickered quietly. Robin stuck her head out of the rack, craning her neck, grinning at the large metal gate, it didn’t have bars either, no one would know they were here. The store also didn’t have display windows. They had free reign.

Robin gripped Nancy’s hand, dragging her out of the rack. She pulled her out, “What should we do first...” Robin squealed excitedly. Nancy’s eyes widened. They were seriously doing this. “Ooh! Candy!” Robin skipped over to the stacks of gummy bears, chocolate, sodas and all other types of sweets. They had stayed in a store that was like a CVS, there was a small rack of Dad shirts in the back with a very deep shelf, perfect fit for two girls. Robin grabbed a pack of Reese’s Pieces and opened them, grabbing one and popping it into her mouth. She held one to Nancy’s mouth, who was still in shock that Robin just grabbed chocolate and didn’t pay for it.

“What?” Nancy said, after blanking for a second. “Eat it!” Robin giggled.

“Oh, ok.” Nancy took the small circle and popped it into her mouth. Robin smiled at her, Nancy blushed. Even though she was absolutely terrified, she wouldn’t deny this was incredibly fun. Robin and Nancy kept doing the most random things as they spent the night in the store. The two continued to do random things around the store. Trying on hats, sunglasses, eating snacks and reading magazines, playing tic tac toe and racing up and down the aisles. Robin laughed as she beat Nancy to the art supplies aisle. She paused, looking up as Nancy laughed.

Nancy noticed Robin staring. Their faces were slightly red, whether it was because they were running around or the fact that their faces were so close together... they probably wouldn't ever know. Robin chuckled, breathing heavily and as Nancy felt herself blush more... Robin laid her forehead on Nancy's shoulder.

Her breath hot on Nancy's neck, Nancy felt her heart race. Could she feel how her breath sped up and how tense her shoulders were? Robin's body brought a warm and comforting heat between the two, Nancy felt butterflies erupt in her stomach... She smelled so good. Robin's bun tickled Nancy's neck and she gasped as Robin brought her head back up, smirking like she had just won a race...

...What the hell was that?

Nancy watched as Robin moved to the other side of the aisle, the dark flickering light shone on her face. Her face was red and small droplets of sweat could be seen on her forehead and temple...

It was such a strange but perfect moment, before Nancy knew it she was face to face with a curious looking Robin, their faces inches away.

Robin's eyes got lazy, her hands hesitantly coming up.

CRINKLE!

Nancy jumped back!

It was a bag of Cheetos that fell on the floor...
Why did the universe hate her?

Robin chuckled, "Oh uh, we should hide again, sneak out as customers start coming in. I think they're opening soon." Nancy just nodded in agreement, a bit disappointed... But she reluctantly followed Robin back to the clothing rack..
